"TWO FISTED JEFFERSON"

HOXIE SUBJECT

Jefferson Mosby of the Mosbys of Kentucky, has been assigned by the District Inspector of Arid, a small town in Nevada, to investigate a dangerous region known as Cactus Flats. This particular section the Inspector advises Mosby, is infected with outlaws who are continually driving out the homesteaders.

Mosby, after receiving his instructions, proceeds to Cactus Flats, and there meets Molly Miller and Danny Duggan, the last of the homesteaders.

While they are explaining to Mosby the cruel way Buck Connor, the Mayor, orders them to vacate every now and then, Red Andrews (one of Buck's men) approaches Molly's cabin and attempts to put another "notice to vacate" on her cabin. Very much angered Molly shoots and wounds Red. Mosby carries the wounded man into Duggan's cabin and bluffs him into believing that he is seriously wounded and won't live. Thinking he is going to die, Red gives Mosby a last message to deliver to the Chief, Buck Connor, for him.

Mosby instructs Duggan to keep Red prisoner until further orders, after which he proceeds over to Molly's cabin. There he finds Buck Connor himself, insulting Molly grossly. Mosby disguises himself, rushes in administers a good thrashing to Buck and orders him to leave the place, for which Molly is very grateful to the big stranger. Then learning from Molly the whereabouts of Buck's headquarters and with a certain plan in his mind, Mosby boards a train for Cactus Flats. He finds himself on the same train with Buck, but by a little quick action and a short cut, he manages to get there first, and when Buck arrives at his office he finds Mosby (who once again has disguised himself), sitting sprawled out in the most unconcerned manner.

Mosby delivers Red's message and incidently hears Buck order his men to arrest Molly Miller and bring her to his office.

Realizing the danger Molly is about to face, Mosby decides to stay and see what happens.

Before long Molly is delivered over to Buck. She sees Mosby, and believing he was instrumental in her arrest, is very much disappointed in him.

Buck states he would like to talk to Molly privately and dismisses his men. However, Mosby, manages to conceal himself in a closet in the office, and when Buck again insults Molly, he jumps out of the closet; a fight follows in which he knocks Buck out, and he and Molly escape out a window, find a horse and ride back to Molly's cabin.

Buck's men discover what has happened, ride over to Molly's but Mosby escapes through a secret passageway in the fire place, and Molly builds a fire there to throw off suspicion.

Believing that Mosby is concealed in Molly's cabin, the men search the place. Mosby in the meantime, climbs on the roof, stuffs the chimney with his hat, causing all the smoke to go back into the cabin. Then he runs around to the door and when the smoke causes the men to run out, he knocks them out one by one as they come out the door, and passes them on to Duggan who has arrived on the scene. Duggan throws the men into the creek, and with the able assistance of his fishing pole, mows the men down under the water, every time they attempt to get out.

Molly gets a gun and forces the men to put their hands up and stand in the water and arrests are made.

After all the excitement is over, Mosby decides in spite of the Inspector's instructions not to trust a woman, that he is perfectly willing to trust Molly and take orders from her for the rest of his life, and thus ends the story.
